WATER & IRRIGATION

The farming enterprise is supported by an established irrigation network drawing from a combination of the Olifants River, irrigation canals, storage dams and boreholes, with registered irrigation allocations linked to the various farm portions. The available information records a combined irrigation allocation of approximately 1,945,020 m³ across the broader operation.

For the Goedehoop grouping specifically, recorded water allocations include:

- Olifants River allocation – Portion 10 Goedehoop 749: ±211,750 m³
- Loskop irrigation allocation – Portion 432 Loskop Noord 12: ±197,890 m³
- Loskop irrigation allocation – Farm Ronddavel 1002: ±197,890 m³
- Loskop irrigation allocation – Portion 417 Loskop Noord 12: ±197,890 m³
- Olifants River allocation – Portion 417 Loskop Noord 12: ±46,200 m³

The irrigation system supports the established citrus orchards and table grape vineyards through permanent irrigation infrastructure, with water storage dams forming an integral part of the farming operation. The available information further notes that the pumps and mother lines were recorded as being in acceptable working condition at the time of inspection.

The combination of river water, irrigation-scheme allocations, storage capacity and established distribution infrastructure provides a strong water platform for the continued operation of the permanent crops and the broader agricultural enterprise.

ABOUT MARBLE HALL DISTRICT

The farming enterprise is situated in the Marble Hall district of Limpopo, within the productive Loskop / Olifants River Valley agricultural region. The area is well known for intensive irrigated farming and permanent fruit production, with commercial agriculture forming a major part of the surrounding landscape.

The region experiences a summer-rainfall climate, with average annual rainfall of approximately 500–700 mm. Summers are generally hot, winters are dry, and frost is relatively infrequent. These conditions, together with established irrigation infrastructure, are favourable for the production of citrus and table grapes.

The broader area includes predominantly well-drained Hutton and Clovelly soils, with generally level to gently undulating terrain. These soil and topographical characteristics support cultivation, orchards, vineyards and other intensive agricultural activities.

Agricultural production in the wider Olifants River Valley includes citrus, table grapes, maize, lucerne, wheat, vegetables, sunflower and groundnuts, supported by established irrigation schemes and access to reliable water sources.

WATER & IRRIGATION

The Krokodilsdrift farming unit is supported by established irrigation infrastructure servicing the commercial citrus orchards. The available information records a registered irrigation allocation linked to the Hereford irrigation system, forming part of the broader water-use structure of the agricultural operation.

For the Krokodilsdrift property specifically, the recorded water allocation is:

- Hereford irrigation allocation – Remainder of Portion 23 of Krokodilsdrift No. 25 JS: ±192,500 m³

The irrigation infrastructure supports approximately 46.60 ha of established citrus orchards, while a storage dam is also recorded as part of the Krokodilsdrift operational infrastructure.

The available information further records the pumps and mother lines of the broader farming operation as being in acceptable working condition at the time of inspection. Together with the irrigation allocation and existing distribution infrastructure, this provides an established water platform for the continued commercial citrus operation.

CLIMATE, SOILS & TOPOGRAPHY

The Krokodilsdrift property is situated within the broader Loskop / Marble Hall agricultural region of Limpopo, an established summer-rainfall area characterised by hot summers, dry winters and relatively infrequent frost. Average annual rainfall in the broader region is recorded at approximately 500–700 mm.

The terrain is generally almost level to gently undulating, with localised moderately sloped areas. This topography is well suited to orchard development, irrigation infrastructure and commercial agricultural activities.

The broader area includes predominantly well-drained Hutton and Clovelly soils, with shallower Glenrosa soils occurring in places. Together with the local climate and established irrigation infrastructure, these conditions support the property's continued use for intensive citrus production.

Climate, Soils & Topography

The Oudestadt farm portions are situated within the broader Loskop / Marble Hall agricultural area of Limpopo, an established summer-rainfall region characterised by hot summers, dry winters and relatively infrequent frost. Average annual rainfall in the broader area is recorded at approximately 500–700 mm.

The terrain is generally almost level to gently undulating, with some moderately sloped areas and localised steeper sections near water-storage features. The topography is considered well suited to permanent crop production and associated agricultural activities.

The broader farming area includes well-drained Hutton and Clovelly soils, with shallower Glenrosa soils occurring in places. Together with the regional climate and established irrigation infrastructure, these conditions support the intensive production of table grapes and citrus.
